

Today is July 1, 2020 ... cannot believe we are already in July and that school starts on August 4th! A lot of work, tough decisions and planning have been going on since the start of June and more to come over the next five weeks. We are here for you and your children and look forward to everyone being back on campus.

Our two summer programs are off to a great start and it is a blessing to see the students and hear their voices once again.

We have included a couple of items below for your awareness and planning for the upcoming school year: A general SAS calendar and a supply list for Grades K through 5. Each Wednesday we will provide additional information to help you prepare for the start of the year.

Some “things to know”

- Next week, St. Anthony School will be sending out information to the community about our K-12 school to engage and encourage families to apply and enroll for next year. Please share this information with your family, friends, and co-workers as we expect a lot of interest over the next several weeks.
- You may have heard or soon will hear information from the Department of Education about their plans for the start of their school year. Their plans will look very different than ours and SAS will continue to provide you with information about our plans and decisions. Please check your emails from us and also our website for updates.
- We have developed a new site/link for our SAS High School and Middle School families to review course options, review schedule options, choose potential classes and select elective courses. This will be shared in next week’s eblast and added to our website after that.

Continued prayers for you, your family, and St. Anthony School as we move through this month with great anticipation and excitement. Have a safe and blessed 4th of July weekend.

God Bless,
